ABSTRACT

Designed to draw together major research, reference, background, and theoretical works focused on health issues of minority women of color in the United States, this bibliography was compiled to provide faculty in postsecondary educational institutions with references to materials which direct attention to health issues of significance to minority women. This bibliography suggests specific areas in which there is and is not an extant literature. It is not intended to be exhaustive or comprehensive in the range of topics or minority groups included. Rather, it is intended to be a stimulus to both teaching and research in areas which for too long have been ignored. The major focus of the references is on social science perspectives on minority women's health and on topics at the intersection of social science and clinical issues. A limited number of clinical references are included. The bibliography is organized into five major sections, one of comparative and reference works and the other four focused on specific groups of minority women: Afro-American, Asian American, Latina American, and Native American. Each major section is organized into the following six categories: General Background and Reference Works; Historical Works; Health Status; Behavior; Utilization and Policy; Reproduction; Sexuality; Maternal and Child Health; Mental Health; Drugs and Alcohol; and Providers of Health Care. ## ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Women, Health and Healing Program at the University of California, San Francisco acknowledges the generous support of the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education, U.S. Department of Education, the Department of Social and Behavioral Sciences and the School of Nursing, University of California, San Francisco which made this bibliography possible.

The compilers, Sheryl Ruzek, Patricia Anderson, Adele Clarke, Virginia Olesen and Kristin Hill wish to acknowledge the many individuals and organizations who contributed valuable references, bibliographies and encouragement to complete this project. Ellen Lewin (Old Dominion College), former Co-Director of the Women, Health and Healing Program, was a major contributor. We especially wish to thank Elizabeth Higginbotham, Bonnie Thornton Dill, Roseann Halcomb and Lynn Weber Cannon at the Center for Research on Women, Memphis State University, for their excellent "Selected Bibliography of Social Science Readings on Women of Color in the U.S.;" Gretchen Bataille (Iowa State University) for her bibliography on Native American Women; Karen Ito for her bibliography on Asian American health issues; Jennie Joe (University of California, Los Angeles) for her bibliography on Native American women; the journal Women and Health for its film reviews; the Media Network for its "Guide to Films on Reproductive Rights" and the Women's Studies Program at University of California, Los Angeles for its "Instructional Films List on Women and Gender."

The following students at the University of California, San Francisco were major contributors: Shelley Hackney (history of Black nurses and Black nursing institutions); Deborah L. Howell (obstetrical practices related to Southeast Asian refugees); Salamah Locks (health care utilization among Southeast Asian refugees) and Katarin Jurich (Native American women's health). This bibliography was initially distributed at each of the three Women, Health and Healing Program's Summer Institutes and many of the participants contributed to it. Numerous scholars took the time to respond to our requests for references and users of early drafts sent us additional citations.

We would also like to thank the following organizations for permission to reprint material:

Sage: A Scholarly Journal of Black Women;
Memphis State University Clearinghouse on Women of Color and Southern Women;

Women's Health Exchange, College of Nursing,
University of Illinois at Chicago.

This endeavor truly represents the work of a community of scholars committed to making accessible the growing body of literature on the health of women of color in the United States. We are excited to see how much work is underway which will make this bibliography "outdated" very quickly.

I. INTRODUCTION

A. Purpose:

This bibliography is designed to draw together major research, reference, background and theoretical works focused on health issues of minority women of color in the United States. It was compiled to provide faculty in postsecondary educational institutions with references to materials which direct attention to health issues of particular salience to minority women. Depending on the level of the institution, the material is appropriate for assigning to students and/or for reading, lecture preparation and preliminary research. The bibliography includes materials appropriate for use in community colleges, universities, graduate programs and health professions schools including nursing, public health, health education and medicine.

We also see the bibliography as a resource for librarians and faculty who face the difficult task of guiding students towards literature appropriate for use in writing term papers and planning independent research. We know from our own experience that few students persist and pursue topics about which faculty declare "there is no literature." This bibliography suggests specific areas in which there is and is not an extant literature. It is not intended to be exhaustive or comprehensive in the range of topics or minority groups included. Rather it is intended to be a stimulus to both teaching and research in areas which for too long have been ignored.

The major focus of the references is on social science perspectives on minority women's health and on topics at the intersection of social science and clinical issues. While some primarily clinical references are included, we have limited our efforts in this direction because of the excellent on-going annotated bibliography "NURSING SCAN: WOMEN'S HEALTH" published by the Graduate Nursing Concentration in Women's Health at the School of Nursing, University of Illinois at Chicago. An order form for this publication is included in the Resources Section at the end of this volume. Scholars interested in the more biomedical aspects of health issues which affect minority women will already rely on resources such as Index Medicus. Students who wish to pursue such topics are urged to seek the assistance of a medical school reference librarian.

We strongly urge you to read the rest of this introduction before attempting to use the bibliography. While the location of some topics is obvious, the location of others is less so and supplemental references may be listed under other categories. No bibliography is perfect and ours is no exception.

B. Description of Sections and Categories

The bibliography is organized into 5 major sections, one of comparative and reference works and the other four focused on specific groups of minority women. The names we have used for each minority group are those recommended by the Thesaurus Project of the National Council for Research on Women and used in all the databases being developed throughout the U.S. by the various Centers for Research on Women. (A list of these Centers can be found in the Resources Section at the end of this volume.)

MAJOR SECTIONS OF THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

1. Comparative and Reference Works includes works which compare different minority group women with each other and/or with white women on various health issues. This section also includes basic background and reference works which provide information on minority women's health such as publications of the Public Health Service. We have attempted to cross-cite all references which noted specific minority groups in the title. For example, an article comparing Japanese and Hispanic women's mental health would be listed in three sections of the bibliography: 1) Comparative Overviews--Mental Health, 2) Asian American Women--Mental Health and 3) Latina American Women--Mental Health. However, many comparative articles do not list groups compared in the title; all such articles are listed ONLY in the Comparative section. Thus, a scholar who is seriously interested in locating literature on Latina American women's mental health would examine references not only in that section but also works in the Comparative Overviews - Mental Health section. We regret that we were unable to examine all of the references cited here and thus were unable to cross-list all citations.

2. Afro-American Women's Health
includes works on Black American women of African, Carribean, Central and South American and Middle Eastern ancestry.

3. Asian American Women's Health
includes works on women of Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Hawaiian, Southeast Asian, Pilipina, Pacific Island, Malaysian, Laotian, Cambodian, Thai and Vietnamese ancestry.

4. Latina American Women's Health includes works on women whose heritage is Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central American, Carribean, South American, and Spanish.

5. Native American Women's Health
includes works on women of any group of native peoples in the continental U.S. and Alaska. Works on Hawaiian women's health are found in the section on Asian American Women's Health where they traditionally have been included.

MAJOR CATEGORIES IN EACH SECTION

Within each major section, references are organized into the following six categories:

1. General Backgound and Reference Works
To understand minority women's health issues, one must understand the specific social, cultural, spiritual, and economic situations of the minority group in general. In this category we have variously included key classic works, largely on minority women's health but also background readings in which health issues are not necessarily central. In some of these more general works, there are specific chapters or sections on health as well. General bibliographies and reference works for the minority group are also cited here. Specific reference works, such as bibliographies on mental health, are cited under the sub-category "Mental Health, Drugs and Alcohol."

2. Historical Works
This category includes historical works focused directly and indirectly on women's health issues. Some are highly specific while others are more general. There are often very few references in this category as few historical works focused explicitly on minority women's health have been located except for studies and writings of nurses, doctors and other notable persons. These latter historical works are listed only under "Providers of Health Care." Users are strongly urged to examine references in the "General Background and Reference" categories to locate additional historical materials on health issues of the specific minority groups of interest.

3. Health Status, Behavior, Utilization and Policy
This broad category covers many inextricably related topics. Many works on minority women's health status, for example, commonly examine such issues in relation to socio-cultural perspectives on health and illness behavior. Further, many works on utilization of health care systems relate this to socio-cultural perspectives on health, illness and providers' behavior and make health care policy arguments based on these interrelations. The emergent literature on minority women's health in aging is similarly interconnected and thus included here. While this category is broad, we believe that it is necessarily so.

4. Reproduction, Sexuality, Maternal and Child Health
This category was developed because of the extensive numbers of related references on each minority group and, again, because of the interrelatedness of the issues in policy-making and practice. Topics include fertility, contraception, sexual attitudes and practices, pregnancy, prenatal care, childbirth and infant mortality.

5. Mental Health, Drugs and Alcohol
A wide range of topics related to both adult and child mental health and psychology are included in this category. Because the majority of the references on drug and alcohol use and treatment for minority group women are found in the psychological literature, we include these topics here.

6. Providers of Health Care
This category contains references on providers of health care (e.g. nurses, physicians, midwives, traditional and lay healers) relevant to the specific minority group. Since many articles cover both historical and contemporary information, we include both in this section. Many of the references were written by providers for providers and aim at improving the quality of care of minority group members by taking cultural issues into account. Because such works often contain considerable background information and references on health beliefs and practices of the specific groups, they may be quite broadly useful.

C. Sources Used and Excluded

We have attempted to include all major references in each category which we could locate by September, 1986. We explicitly excluded references to articles in newspapers, very obscure journals and unpublished papers. A number of works have been published by minority group organizations, both in academia and in the community. We only included here material which is currently available from those organizations. Scholars interested in pursuing the historical emergence of such material are encouraged to contact the Clearinghouse on Women of Color at Memphis State University (see Section III, D).

Last, we note that we list a wide variety of references in this bibliography, many written from perspectives with which individually and collectively we do not agree. Minority women's health, like virtually all emerging areas, is highly political and politicized. We are fully aware that both blatant and subtle forms of racism, sexism and class bias can be found in many of the works cited here. We believe that it is only through coming to grips with such perspectives in the literature by critically examining it in educational settings and in scholarly research that alternative, humane and feminist solutions to health problems in general and minority women's health problems in particular can be found.

D. How to Use the Bibliography

This bibliography can be used in many different ways. For faculty attempting to introduce topics in minority women's health into their courses, we include a two page "Basic Bibliography on Minority Women's Health Issues." This may be photocopied and given to students, colleagues and librarians. We urge faculty ask their libraries to purchase these basic materials. We also urge faculty to ask their libraries to order copies of this bibliography for their Reference Collection and to be placed in the Reserve Reading Collection as an aid to students interested in supplemental reading and preparing term papers.

For more ambitious curricular efforts in minority women's health, this bibliography can serve as the basis for courses on the health of women of color and/or of one particular minority group. Advanced courses on maternal and child health or mental health can be organized by drawing heavily from specific categories. We can envision seminars in which students read, annotate, and discuss all of the work on one or several topics as preparation for undertaking their own research.

Some of the primary historical references may be difficult to locate; we suggest that you contact a major medical or historical library directly or through interlibrary loan. This approach should also be effective for faculty in smaller institutions who wish to gather a wide range of resources in minority women's health.

Researchers especially should note that all of the references listed in this bibliography will be entered into the Database on Women of Color and Southern Women established and maintained by the Center for Research on Women, Memphis State University. They will be assigned keyword codes which will facilitate research use of these citations. The keywords are being developed through a joint effort with the National Council for Research on Women's Thesaurus Project which is working towards standardizing keywords used in databases on women and women's issues in the United States. Scholars involved in research in any area of minority women's studies and women's health studies should avail themselves of this extraordinary database service. The Center for Research on Women at Memphis State University has been supported in this effort by a grant from the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education. Information on the project and computer database and Search Request Forms for using this database are included here in Section III, D. Please contribute additional references which you locate to this on-going database project. A form for submissions is included here in Section III, F.

In addition to this bibiography, the Women, Health and Healing Program offers a SYLLABI SET ON WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING: 14 COURSES and a volume of TEACHING MATERIALS ON WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING. Both include extensive sections on the health issues of minority women in the U.S. and strategies for incorporating these issues in a variety of curricula. An order form for these materials can be found at the back of this volume.

III. SELECTED RESOURCES IN MINORITY WOMEN'S HEALTH

A. Audiovisual Resources

The following list of films and videos was developed from a variety of resources. The journal Women and Health deserves special mention for regularly publishing helpful film reviews. The Media Network (208 W. 13th Street, New York, NY 10011, (212)620-0877) has published an excellent "Guide to Films on Reproductive Rights" which we also relied upon here.

If you are associated with a university or have access to one, we suggest you check to see if a film/video is already owned by them. You may also wish to urge your school to purchase key films you intend to use regularly.

While we have previewed many, we have not previewed all films listed and therefore recommend that you do so before using them when possible. Since rental costs change (in both directions) and availability may be limited, do contact distributors at least six weeks in advance whenever possible. Some distributors may also make video versions available upon request.

Films and videos are listed in the following categories:

- Race/Class/Culture Issues with Health Implications
- Women's Health Care Politics/Issues
- Aging
- Childbirth Education in Cultural Contexts
- Incarcerated Women
- Occupational Health
- Providers of Health Care
- Reproductive Health Issues
- Self Image/Body Image
- Violence Against Women

Race/Class/Culture Issues with Health Implications

THE WOMEN'S FILM. (1971). Focus on how women are especially victimized by class, racial and gender inequalities. Black and white, 40 min., 16 mm. Third World Newsreel, 335 W. 38th St., 5th Floor, NY, NY 10018, (212)947-9277. Rental fee $55.

RESEARCH CLEARINGHOUSE ON WOMEN OF COLOR AND SOUTHERN WOMEN
CENTER FOR RESEARCH ON WOMEN

The Center for Research on Women at Memphis State University was founded in 1982 with an initial grant from the Ford Foundation. The major objectives of the Center are to conduct, promote, and advance research on women of color in the United States and Southern women. To that end we have worked closely with scholars in these developing fields as well as with faculty and students who need information on these groups of women.

From the beginning, we at the Center have been aware of the difficulties in locating social science and historical materials on these groups. The interdisciplinary nature of women's studies complicates the research process for many students, teachers and scholars. The research process is often further complicated because materials on women of color and Southern women are frequently located in journals and publications which are not indexed in many of the major on-line data bases. To address these problems and to aid in locating and disseminating research on women of color and Southern women, the Center for Research on Women developed the Research Clearinghouse.

The Research Clearinghouse on Women of Color and Southern Women is designed to provide scholars, educators, students, policy makers, and the general public with up-to-date bibliographic and human resource information on research which focuses on these two groups of women. This project was initially funded in 1984 by the U.S. Department of Education's Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE).

The Clearinghouse is a computer-based information retrieval system. It includes three major files: (1) a "human resource file" of individual researchers containing such information as institutional affiliation, areas of research interests, published and unpublished work, etc.; (2) an indexed file of full bibliographic citations for works focusing on these groups of women; and (3) a thesaurus type vocabulary of keyword descriptors to enhance the utility of the system.

The Clearinghouse covers social science research produced since 1975 in the fields of sociology, anthropology, economics, political science, history, women's studies, ethnic studies, social psychology and education. The Center collects information on research from a variety of sources including individual researchers, organizations (e.g., ethnic and women's studies centers), bibliographies, and so forth. The data base currently contains 2,500+ up-to-date references to books, journal articles, chapters in books, unpublished works (including doctoral dissertations) and non-print materials.

Until now, there has been no centralized data base of information on women of color and Southern women. Although placement on these groups has been incorporated into some existing data bases, they tend to be limited in any of the following ways: they are restricted to information in certain disciplines; lack information about unpublished or in-progress work; are organized so that information is not retrievable by race, class, gender and region; or contain limited references about research, and no information about researchers working in these areas.

The Research Clearinghouse defines women of color to include Native American Indians; Afro-Americans (West Indian Americans, African immigrants to the United States, etc.); Latinas (Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, Cubans, and other women of Latin origin); Asian Americans (Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Thai, and other women of Asian origin); and Pacific Islanders (Filipinas, Hawaiians, Tongans, etc.). Southern women include women from Washington, DC and from the following states: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

In addition to identifying citations from recently published books, leading journals, and many publications not routinely covered by other bibliographic services, a National Advisory Board of over twenty social scientists and historians monitor the new research in their fields and recommend entries for the data base. Each reference in the data base is indexed by up to eight keyword descriptors according to terms employed by the National Council for Research on Women's The Women's Index, a women's studies thesaurus. This thesaurus was developed as a collaborative project of women's research centers across the nation including our Center.

In conjunction with the Research Clearinghouse, the Curriculum Integration Project focuses on disseminating information to Memphis and Mid South area college faculty as well as other faculty across the nation. This is accomplished with the monthly "Seminar on Women in the Curriculum", which is held throughout the academic year. At the end of May, the project hosts the "Annual Workshop on Women in the Curriculum", a 3-day event which demonstrates the Research Clearinghouse data base; provides teachers, faculty and administrators with the opportunity to revise course(s) either being taught or created; and introduces innovative resources for classroom use (e.g., films, visual aids, etc.). The Clearinghouse has recently published the keynote addresses from the 1985 and 1986 Workshops, which are now available for purchase.

For information on Clearinghouse resources, requesting a search, becoming a part of the human resource file, or curriculum workshops, call or write the Research Clearinghouse, c/o Center for Research on Women, at the address above.

III. F. NEW CURRICULAR MATERIALS IN WOMEN'S HEALTH

New bibliographies, syllabi and teaching materials are now available for graduate and undergraduate teaching and research in social science, health education and women's studies courses. Materials are appropriate for instruction in community colleges, universities and schools in the health professions.

MINORITY WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING IN THE U.S.: SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY & RESOURCES

A new bibliography on health issues of minority women, it includes sections on Black, Hispanic, Native American and Asian women. Topics include overviews, history, health status, health beliefs and behavior, utilization, policy, reproduction, sexuality, maternal and child health, mental health, minority women as providers of health care, comparative and reference works.

SYLLABI SET ON WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING: 15 COURSES

Syllabi emphasize social science perspectives on women's health. Courses include lower and upper division introductions and graduate instruction in health education, history, health policy, cross-cultural issues, social theory, poverty and women's health policy, quantitative research methods, older women's health, minority women's health and life cycle perspectives.

TEACHING MATERIALS ON WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING

Short articles focus on developing courses appropriate to varied institutions, integrating minority women's health issues into diverse curricula, teaching sensitive policy issues and pedagogical materials.

These curricular materials were developed by Virginia Olesen, Adele Clarke, and Patricia Anderson of UCSF with Sheryl Ruzek of Temple University. Support was provided by the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education (DOE), the Department of Social and Behavioral Sciences, and the School of Nursing (UCSF).

DOCTORAL EDUCATION IN WOMEN, HEALTH AND HEALING AT UCSF

The Graduate Program in Sociology, UCSF, offers a track in women, health and healing for doctoral students. Information may be obtained from Susan Benner, Graduate Program in Sociology, Department of Social & Behavioral Sciences, School of Nursing, N-631-Y, University of California, San Francisco, CA 94143, (415) 476-3047.
